Celebrate the Art of Service in Milan

Hello, Lions!

When I think of Italy I think of great food, beautiful landscapes, and a rich diversity of friendly people. This year, Italian Lions—more than 1,300 clubs and 40,000 members strong—are opening their doors to the global Lion community in July, and I hope you will consider joining me there.

Milan, in particular, has a history of fostering creativity and ingenuity. Home to Leonardo DaVinci and Michelangelo, it is the perfect destination for this year's convention, celebrating a renaissance of service.

The annual convention is a special moment for us all to pause and come together to reflect on what we accomplished as Lions over the past year and what we hope to accomplish in the coming year. It is a chance to see firsthand what it truly means to be an international organization.

While not all Lions can make the journey, all Lions will be the focus of this year's events. We will be looking for ways to infuse the work of all who serve with the creativity and passion that make us who we are. I truly believe Lions are among the most creative problem solvers in the world, and each year the time I spend surrounded by this community inspires my own future service and fuels a renewed dedication to all the work that still needs to be done.

I look forward to celebrating the art of service with you in Milan.

Yours,

Gudrun Yngvadottir

TANZANIA

Getting Personal for a Good Cause

The members of the Lions Club of Dar es Salaam Tanzanites have decided it's time to come out with their story. In the small Tanzanian city, where everyone knows everyone, there is still a social stigma about health conditions like diabetes.

Lion Attar Kaur Saini was diagnosed with gestational diabetes in her 28th week of pregnancy. She shared her story on social media in an effort to destigmatize the disease in her community.

But the Dar es Salaam Lions know that being aware of the early signs and acting on them—getting to a doctor, getting diagnosed—can have big health ramifications. So, they've decided to start outing themselves on social media in an effort to raise awareness and destigmatize diabetes.

Lion Attar Kaur Saini shared her story as part of a series the club has called “Real People, Real Stories.” Expecting a child in December of 2018, Attar was experiencing a smooth pregnancy until her 28th week. “I started feeling extremely tired,” she writes in her awareness post. “I would have a frequent need to visit the loo, felt thirsty and [had] cold sweats.” Concerned, Attar mentioned it to her doctor. Further testing revealed she had gestational diabetes.

“Obviously, the first thought in my mind was what will happen to my baby,” wrote Attar. But the doctor explained to her that it isn't uncommon, especially in women with a family history of diabetes, and there are steps she could take to keep her and her baby healthy. Unmanaged, gestational diabetes can have health effects on the baby and contribute to a difficult birth.

Attar paid close attention to her diet and began taking medication to help keep her blood sugar in check. “I request all expecting mothers to please be alert,” she writes.

The charter president of the club, and current GST coordinator, Bhavika Sajan, hopes that by using social media to spread personal stories of those affected by diabetes, the people in her community will not only be more educated about the early signs and symptoms, but be more willing to talk about them with their doctor.

“People still take diabetes very lightly,” she says. “However, the responses we have been receiving are overwhelming. The posts are doing really well.”

Saini delivered a healthy baby boy on November 26, 2018.

Children Express Love, Peace, and Harmony through Art

Every year the love for the Menlo Park Lions' Valentine's Day activity grows.

This year, for the fifth February in a row, the Lions in New Jersey are hosting their Love, Peace and Harmony art contest, giving young artists the chance to show their skills and express their support for love and peace.

More than 100 children between the ages of 3 and 16 put their ideas and talents to paper last year, says club president Prashant Karnik.

Children are organized by age groups in different classrooms at the Little Big Ones School. There is a category for special needs children, and all of the artwork is done on site and in one hour.

After one hour, the artwork is handed over to a panel of local artists who serve as judges.

"Parents were so happy to see their kid's creativity," says charter member Varsha Naik who initiated the program. "And the mayor of our township was very happy to see the Menlo Park Lions Club's initiative.

"Every year the contest is conducted in the month of February so kids can understand love within and around them, how it leads to peace, and how the outcome of this is harmony itself, which can change the world."

Parents and children ages 11 to 13 are also encouraged to participate in LCI's annual peace poster competition, and Menlo Park Lions set a goal to increase the number of budding artists every year.

BETTER SERVICE, BY DESIGN

CREATING A MORE BEAUTIFUL WORLD THROUGH SERVICE

By Emma Harper

There might never be a better reason to pack your bags this summer. The 102nd annual Lions Clubs International Convention will be held in Milan, Italy—located in the heart of Europe where everything, it seems, is within arm’s reach.

DESTINATION: MILAN

July 5-9, 2019, Lions will be converging on the city famous for its works of art—and the artists who made them—to discuss a different kind of art form. Service, the act of giving, is itself a kind of art. And this summer, Lions will be using their creativity to work toward solutions to the world’s biggest problems. If it’s inspiration you’re looking for, you’ll find it in Milan.

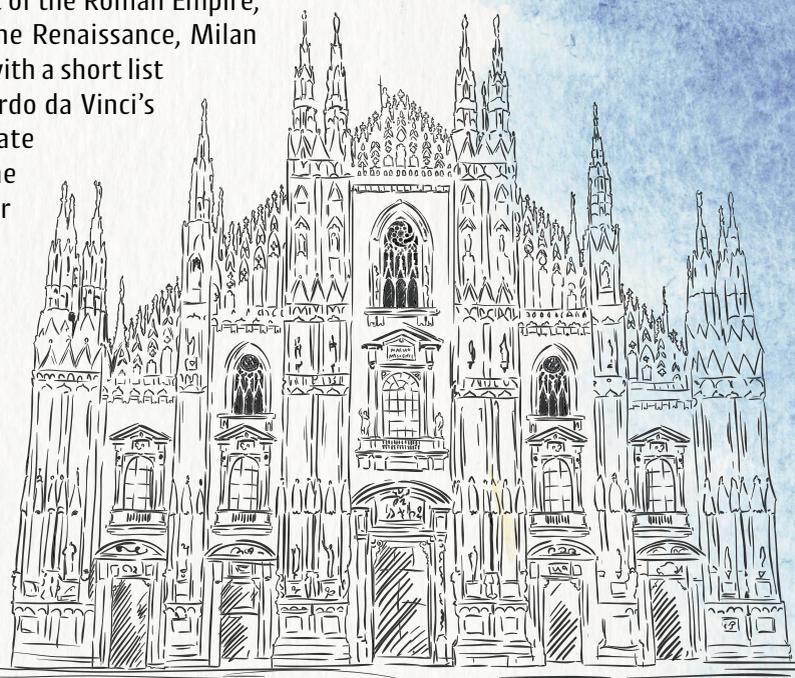

Stained glass is just one of the stars of the art scene in Milan.

THE ART SCENE ONLY BEGINS AT "THE LAST SUPPER"

Unlike Rome, renowned the world over as the seat of the Roman Empire, and Florence, often named as the birthplace of the Renaissance, Milan doesn't have an easy tagline. Many visitors come with a short list of sites in mind: usually "The Last Supper," Leonardo da Vinci's Renaissance masterpiece, and the grandly ornate and stylistically hybrid Duomo, perhaps with time built in for a stop at one of the city's many designer boutiques.

But the forward-thinking creativity of the Milanese goes beyond these showy centerpieces. Artworks that run the gamut of time periods and art movements are tucked away in house museums and churches, and the city hums with an inventiveness and dynamism that reveals itself in fashion, design, architecture, and urban development. It's this confluence of historic and creative forces that makes Milan such a stirring place, one whose many strands you won't want to stop unraveling once you begin.

TAKE IN THE MASTERPIECES

Leonardo da Vinci, the inventive Italian polymath, had an expansive range of interests—it would almost certainly be easier to list the subjects he didn't take a liking to rather than all those he did. But da Vinci is best known as a painter, and his masterpiece "The Last Supper" at the monastery of Santa Maria delle Grazie reveals his genius, even in its ghostly state.

Da Vinci spent almost two decades of his early working life in the city, where Ludovico Maria Sforza, also known as Ludovico il Moro, a regent and later Duke of Milan, served as his patron. In fact, it was Ludovico who commissioned "The Last Supper," which da Vinci made using the novel technique of applying tempera paints to dried plaster (traditionally frescoes were painted on wet plaster and thus had to be completed quite quickly).

Due to the fragility of the painting, small groups can bask in da Vinci's genius for only 15 minutes at a time (this limit on visitors is the reason why tickets often sell out months in advance). Yet there's no cap—outside of opening and closing times—on how long you can admire his frescoes in the Sala delle Asse (Room of Wooden Boards) at the Sforza Castle or pages from his Codex Atlanticus notebooks at the Biblioteca Ambrosiana, a library and picture gallery.

There's a reason why da Vinci is so renowned, but he's not the only master in town. The Museo Poldi Pezzoli, an often-overlooked house museum, contains a superb collection of Renaissance works while the Pinacoteca di Brera has some fantastic 15th-century Venetian paintings.

EXPERIENCE TODAY'S MASTERS

Artistic production in Milan is by no means a thing of the past. The contemporary art scene has recently flourished there. In 2015, Fondazione Prada opened a new permanent location in an old gin distillery on the southern edge of the city; on the northern fringes, Pirelli transformed a former locomotive plant into its own contemporary art space, Hangar Bicocca, in 2012. Both are immensely popular and packed with crowds on the weekends.

Milan has also earned a reputation as a design powerhouse. Propelled by the city's growth as an industrial center over the last century or so, Milanese designers have embraced innovative technology and experimental shapes to create iconic objects—not unlike da Vinci with his inventions.

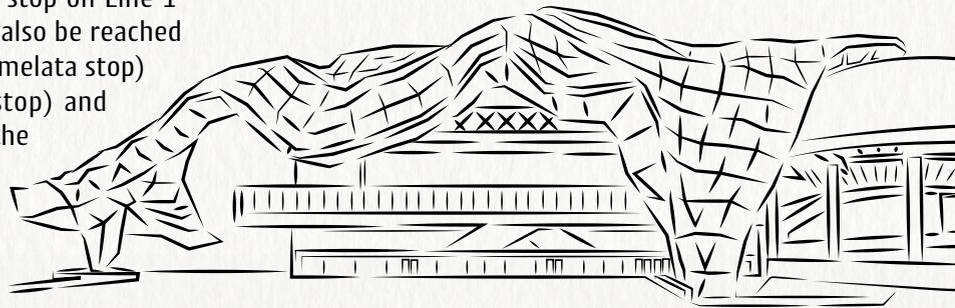

La Triennale di Milano, a design and art institution in Sempione Park that organizes temporary exhibitions and events, is one of the best places to soak up the city's design history. For more contemporary works, visit Spazio Rossana Orlandi and browse experimental objects and furnishings sprawled across 19,000 square feet of a former tie factory.

More visibly, the new buildings that have recently reshaped the skyline show an eager embrace of forward-thinking architecture. Perhaps most stunning are the skyscrapers in the CityLife district designed by “starchitects” Zaha Hadid, Arata Isozaki, and Daniel Libeskind.

Adjacent to these three shining towers is where Lions will call home for five days. The curvaceous MiCo Milano Convention Center is easily accessible by metro (via the Amendola or Lotto stop on Line 1 or the Portello stop on Line 5). It can also be reached by bus number 78 (the Colleoni/Gattamelata stop) and tram numbers 19 (the Boezio stop) and 27 (the Piazza 6 Febbraio stop). But the most enjoyable way to navigate the city is by foot, and MiCo is just a 30-minute walk from Sempione Park.

Skyscrapers in the CityLife district put Milan's vibrant modern architecture on display.

FIVE DAY TRIPS FROM MILAN

Milan has plenty to offer visitors who are willing to scratch below the surface, but its central location in northern Italy also makes it an ideal base for exploring the smaller cities and majestic lakes that are an hour's train ride from downtown.

Lake Maggiore

Northern Italy's lakes are about as picture-perfect as they come: rough-hewn mountains spill into crystalline water. Each has its own personality, with Lake Maggiore being the grand dame of the bunch. Nowhere is this majesty better appreciated than in Stresa, where a long verdant pathway allows you to relish the lakefront on one side and the town's opulent hotels on the other.

The three jewel-like Borromean Islands only add to the sumptuous feel of Stresa. Isola Bella is the closest to the town, and its fantastical ten-tiered baroque garden can be glimpsed from the shore. Stop for lunch at one of the excellent seafood restaurants on Isola Superiore before taking the ferry over to Isola Bella to explore this garden, complete with white peacocks, and Palazzo Borromeo, the palace it's attached to. For a bird's eye view of these beauties, take the Funivia Stresa-Alpino-Mottarone, a cable car that runs between Stresa and Monte Mottarone with a stop at Alpino midway.

Cremona

Classical music lovers will want to make a beeline for Cremona, a city that became renowned for manufacturing musical instruments in the 16th century and where Antonio Stradivari later made his world-famous violins. Today the high-tech Museo del Violino, which opened in 2013, exhibits many gorgeous Cremona-made violins and invites musicians to perform on these precious instruments; be sure to check the website for recital and concert dates. The medieval city center is also worth a visit, not just to see the picturesque Piazza del Comune and the 12th-century Cremona Cathedral, but also to wander the narrow backstreets, where you can still glimpse luthiers practicing their craft.

Lake Como

A playground for celebrities, Lake Como is perhaps the flashiest of the northern Italian lakes. To really soak up the luxury, take a train to Varenna, where you can dine on a terrace suspended over the water and poke around elegant villas in the old town. From there, hop over to Bellagio by ferry (or private boat, if you want to live large) to wander the lakeside village's cobbled lanes, which are studded with small boutiques.

For something a bit more active, follow the Sentiero del Viandante, an ancient track running along the eastern edge of the lake, from Varenna to Bellano. Just over six kilometers long, this portion of the hike can be comfortably walked in three hours and is relatively flat, except for the initial ascent. Reward yourself with a swim at the public beach in Bellano before hopping on a train back to Varenna.

Turin

There's much to love about this former center of industry (Fiat's Lingotto car factory, now a huge arcade of shops and entertainment outlets, was an icon of Italian industrialism when it was built in the early 20th century). Turin was the first capital of the unified Kingdom of Italy in the 19th century and the seat of the Savoy dynasty—the royal residences and long, porticoed arcades, allegedly built to keep the aristocrats dry, give the city a regal air. Today, it is Italy's fourth largest city and also the capital of the Piedmont region, famed for its food and wine, making the dining scene an embarrassment of riches. Add in an elegant café culture and an offbeat art scene—it's home to both the museum of the Shroud of Turin and an archeological museum dedicated to Egyptian culture—and you'll never want to leave.

Bologna

Many people would argue that the best food in Italy can be found in the Emilia-Romagna region. So foodies should not miss the region's capital, and what some would call the gastronomical capital of Italy, the medieval city of Bologna. Try the renowned tortellini in brodo (a filled pasta dumpling served in broth), tagliatelle al ragù (ragù, better known to most foreigners as Bolognese sauce, was first concocted here) or mortadella (cured pork) at one of the many fine restaurants that dot this ancient city. For an all-in-one experience, take a bus to the recently opened FICO Eataly World, a theme park with 40 food factories and just as many restaurants, as well as educational "carousels" and a cornucopia of food products from all across the country.

FOOD TO EAT WHILE IN MILAN

People love eating Italian food wherever they are. But these four specialties are best eaten in Milan and nowhere else.

Cotoletta Ossobuco

You can find cotoletta alla Milanese, a cousin of the schnitzel, just about anywhere in Milan, whether you're dining at Michelin-starred restaurants or going for lunch at a neighborhood bar. And while the basic recipe is the same—a veal cutlet breaded and then fried in butter—each spot seems to have their own twist on the dish. Some go for boneless while others prefer bone-in, and then there's the debate over thin versus thick, crunchy versus juicy. Don't be afraid to order it more than once until you find your favorite version.

Like cotoletta, ossobuco is another veal main found at traditional Milanese restaurants. Yet, unlike the fried cutlet, ossobuco is a slow-braised shank and thus requires more time to cook. The end result, though, is worth the wait: the fork-tender meat almost dissolves on the tongue, and the delicious marrow at the center of the bone adds a punch of flavor. For a real whopper of a meal, order the ossobuco and risotto alla Milanese combination offered at a number of spots.

Risotto Panettone

Most people associate Italy with two dishes: pasta and pizza. While both are certainly widespread, you'll actually find that rice, rather than pasta, figures more prominently in the traditional cuisine of northern Italy. In Milan especially, which is located in the Po Valley, also known as the "rice bowl of Italy," you'll often find risotto on the menu. The city is particularly famous for risotto alla Milanese, a dish made bright yellow by the addition of saffron. Taste-wise, though, the most important components are Parmesan or Lodigiano cheese and bone marrow, which are responsible for the rich flavor.

Come Christmastime, Milan's pastry shops are stacked high with elegant boxes of panettone, a loaf of sweet bread with origins in the city. Cylindrical in shape and with a domed top, this dessert, which falls somewhere in between a bread and a cake, will blow away any memories you may have of traditional Christmas fruitcakes: the dough is fluffy and pillowy, and the candied fruit and raisins are luscious. Many pastry shops now bake panettone year-round, and a slice of this masterpiece is the perfect accompaniment to your afternoon coffee.

Accessible computers open up a whole new world for the blind

by Joan Cary

Barry Carver will be the first to say he was just wasting time. He spent his days listening to audio books, had nowhere to go, and no hope for his future.

But then the box from Computers for the Blind (CFTB) was delivered to his home in Tennessee.

“They’re life changing,” says Carver of the Texas non-profit that has shipped more than 12,000 free computers to blind people across the U.S.

“Computers change peoples’ lives, and the people at CFTB gave me hope,” he says. “They let me know that blindness is just an inconvenience. It’s not the end of the world. I just have to do things a little different.”

Now Carver and his wife, Debra, who is also blind, run Mountain Crafts, a successful online business, from their home. An ordained preacher, he shares his message around the world through a website for the blind, and he conducts seminars over the phone, telling blind listeners that they too can start their own business.

They just need a computer.

“ Computers change peoples' lives... ”

“Positive. Everything I have to say about that organization is positive. Positive,” says Carver. “It’s because of what CFTB did for me that I’m able to tell others there are a zillion things you can do. You can be economically successful.”

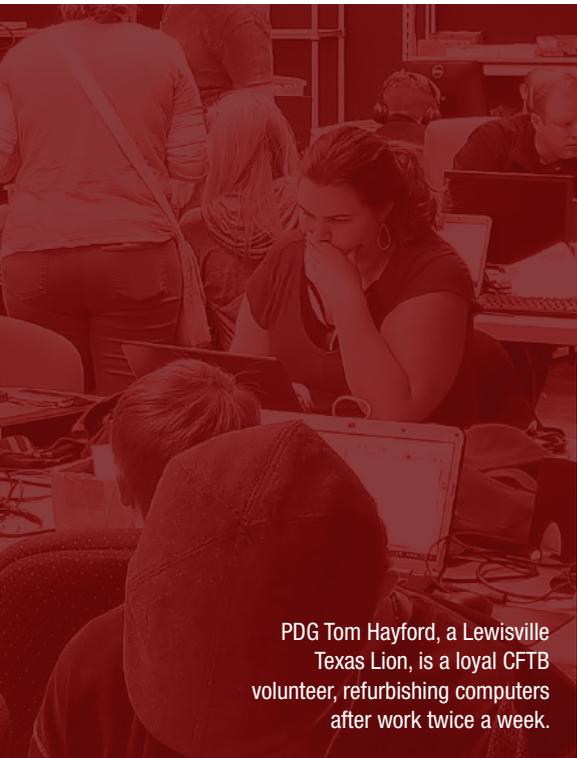

From their facility in Richardson, Texas, about 50 volunteers at CFTB refurbish donated computers and send them to people who cannot see well enough to use a computer and cannot afford a new computer with the expensive technology that makes them accessible. Blind recipients get computers with added text-to-speech software. Clients who are low vision get screen magnification software with their computer. Some people need both.

Lion Bob Langford, a member of the Dallas [Texas] White Rock Lions Club, started the organization [first known as Texas Services for the Physically Impaired] from humble beginnings in 1995. Although he lost all vision in an accident at age 16, Langford never let blindness stop him. He saw computers as a way of becoming more independent and self-sufficient.

“Dad realized pretty early on that computers could be a real life changer for blind people,” says Langford’s son, Mark Langford, in Texas, who remembers when he and his siblings helped their Dad by reading computer manuals aloud so he could transcribe them into Braille.

“I’m amazed sometimes when I think back to what he did,” says Langford. “Could I have done all he did? I stand back amazed. When he got an idea into his mind for something he had to do, all obstacles melted away.”

Langford, 89, is retired and living in Virginia now. Colleyville Texas Lion

PDG Tom Hayford, a Lewisville Texas Lion, is a loyal CFTB volunteer, refurbishing computers after work twice a week.

David Jeppson is CFTB's executive director. Most of the used computers they receive are donated through north Texas Lions clubs in districts 2 X1 and 2 E2 by members who have an unused computer, know a friend with one, or have a corporate connection to a computer no longer in use.

CFTB volunteers, some of them Lions, work in shifts to refurbish them, and Lewisville Texas Lion Tom Hayford, past district governor in 2 E2, is one of the leaders, donating about eight hours a week to the nonprofit. A component engineer, he has repaired enough computers in his lifetime that if left alone he can refurbish one in 90 minutes, he says. The limiting factor is the age and processing speed of the computer.

"I like doing this because I personally feel like I'm making a difference. In Lions we do so many great things, but you don't get the immediate feedback," Hayford says. "With this, you pack it up and you know who the computer is going to."

CFTB's computers come with detailed instructions for recipients, and CFTB has a blind technical support person in Minnesota who troubleshoots problems.

"For the blind, the two biggest obstacles are transportation and accessibility to media," Jeppson says.

" I like doing this because I personally feel like I'm making a difference. "

"A computer makes it so they don't have to find transportation to go out to a store. They can buy online. They can take college courses online, and they can communicate with the world online."

Although the computer is free, recipients pay a US$100 to $130 processing fee for a computer that would otherwise costs them US$1,000 or more, says Jeppson. Carver says this is one thing he likes about CFTB. "You get this computer for free, but you put a little skin in the deal. It's a fact that if you have something involved in this, you will cherish it that much more.

The organization also works with Alphapointe, a Missouri nonprofit that supports and empowers people with vision loss. CFTB provides the laptops for Alphapointe's weeklong summer camp for visually impaired youth, and at the end of the week the students get to take their computers home.

"Lions gave us white canes," says Carver. "They take us to retreats and do all these things for us, and that's awesome, but they can't open the world up to us like a computer can. That's why this is so important."

“The Pick of the Litter,” an 80-minute documentary, premiered at the Sundance Film Festival in January and has been showing in theaters nationwide since the fall. The film is a captivating behind-the-scenes look at the long, involved, multi-year process of training five spirited puppies: Potomac, Patriot, Primrose, Poppet and Phil. The stakes are high, and the bonds with the puppies among the various puppy raisers, the field reps and trainers of Guide Dogs and, eventually, the blind owners, are deep and emotional.

Year after year, Lions clubs, including King City, support Guide Dogs. Nearly 60 clubs donated $70,000 to Guide Dogs in the last two years. Lions also cook and serve food at events on campus, and some Lions are puppy raisers for Guide Dogs. “They’re [Lions] pretty amazing. They’re awesome,” says Linda Owen, Potomac’s puppy raiser.

Potomac was invited to the King City meeting because Owen knew longtime member Bill Gerlin from volunteering for Meals on Wheels. The exuberant puppy easily won over the Lions. “No one opposed [the honorary membership]. They’d better not!” says Gerlin. Recalls President Fae Lloyd, “He was a very sweet dog. He was so full of energy.”

Too much energy, as it turned out. Guide Dogs decided Potomac was not a good fit to work with the blind. In the film, a staffer who has closely observed Potomac tries to let down Owen easy. “OK, I’ve seen enough. He told us himself,” the staffer says to Owen. She then turns her attention to Potomac: “OK, mister, it’s civilian life for you.”

Only 300 of the 800 puppies at Guide Dog targeted each year for training ultimately become guide dogs. The others are called “career changers,” a polite way of saying they instead become a dog for those with diabetes or another condition, a breeder or simply a family pet.

Commonly seen working seamlessly in public, guide dogs seem born to lead. But becoming a guide dog is a rigorous process involving many steps of training and tests that must be passed. Dogs that make it are indeed considered the “pick of the litter.” They must not only automatically obey the commands of its owner but also learn “intelligent disobedience”—not heeding a command to move forward when a platform, light pole, or car may lurk.

Over 10 months, puppy raisers help socialize the puppies and expose them to common situations such as restaurants, stores, schools, and even traveling by airplane, since many dogs will need to fly to go home with their owner. The film depicts the attachment the puppy raisers have for their puppies. “Left by myself my mind goes to bad places,” says puppy raiser Adam, an Iraq War veteran suffering from post-traumatic stress. “The dog saved me from myself. I’m able to channel my love.”

Puppy raisers cry when the day comes to relinquish their dog. “It takes a couple days to mourn it,” says a woman who has raised 10 puppies and whose dad is blind. Fond of their charges as well, Guide Dog staff can see the big picture. “It’s the end for me [with the puppy],” says a trainer. “It’s the beginning for them.”

Those puppies that make the grade prove to be life-changing for a blind person. Guide Dog receives about 1,100 applications each year for a dog. “Being chosen is like winning the lottery,” says an overjoyed Ronald Strother, an active young adult who has been blind since he was a toddler. His dog now enables him to take long hikes in the woods. Janet Gearheart also received a dog after not having one for a while. “It was love at first sight,” she exults. Earlier in the film, walking down a street, her cane hits a crack and jolts her. A cane is OK, she says, but nothing beats the “fuzzy nose” of a dog.

Owen is currently raising her fourth puppy, Auburn. Her first made it, but the other two did not. If Auburn graduates, she knows who to call. “Our offer [of a harness] still stands,” says Gerlin.

Diabetes: Lions Take on a Global Epidemic

BY CASSANDRA ROTOLO

It's an easy, 12-minute drive from Len Dompke's suburban Chicago home to the local hospital. Yet, the first time Dompke made the drive, it was one of the hardest of his life. Making this drive meant recognizing and changing some unhealthy habits, which was not going to be easy.

Dompke was headed straight for type 2 diabetes. That was before making the drive—each week for a year—to Elmhurst Hospital. If something didn't change, he was going to become one of the 400 million world citizens living with the disease.

District 1-J Lions partnered with Edward-Elmhurst Health (EEH) to develop a diabetes prevention and lifestyle intervention program, which received a US$95,000 grant from Lions Clubs International Foundation (LCIF). Thanks to this incredible teamwork, Dompke has a new lease on life.

A Preventable Trend

Type 2 diabetes is a disease in which the body does not properly use insulin. Diabetes can lead to serious health complications, including skin conditions, eye problems, and nerve damage. Left unchecked, it can lead to premature death. The number of people living with diabetes has risen from 108 million in 1980 to 422 million in 2014 and continues to rise, according to the World Health Organization (WHO).

The good news is that with changes to diet and lifestyle, type 2 diabetes can be prevented. And that is where Lions get involved.

LCIF diabetes grants can provide Lions with up to US$250,000. Projects typically support diabetes prevention, education, and improved access to treatment for underserved populations. LCIF also supports diabetic retinopathy programs through SightFirst. Visit lcif.org/Grants to learn more about grant funding to help Lions' districts develop and implement large-scale humanitarian projects.

Lions Heed the Call

The program that helped put Len Dompke's life back on track, Jumpstart Your Health, is focused squarely on providing education and resources to low-income adults at risk of developing diabetes.

Local Lions, backed by that US$95,000 grant from LCIF and health professionals at EEH, are integral to the program's success. Each District 1-J Lion involved in the project is trained to be a community ambassador who can advocate for diabetes prevention, facilitate informational meetings, interact with program participants, and host fundraising events. It's a classic example of Lions doing what they do best—serving!

Len Dompke holds up the pants he wore to his very first "Jumpstart Your Health" class. Dompke is grateful to Lions for the support he needed to make lasting changes. Photo courtesy of Edward-Elmhurst Health.

Lions are committed to improving the quality of life for people worldwide who are living with diabetes.

A simple blood test can help diagnose diabetes and put those affected on a course to healthier living.

Lion Patty Worden worked diligently alongside her club members to raise their portion of the funding needed for the Jumpstart Your Health program. “I was quite surprised when I took that A1C test and found out I was prediabetic. After going through the program, I’m tracking my steps, drinking more water, serving more fresh foods. I feel better and make healthier decisions,” says Worden. “I also have the added benefit of knowing that my classmates wouldn’t have been able to take this class without the support of my Lions club. We have worked so hard to provide this for our community. I’m so proud to be a Lion!”

An Inspirational Success

After a very honest discussion with his doctor and unexpected knee surgery, Dompke, 61, mustered the courage to make a phone call that would change his life. He was determined to turn things around and get healthy. Forever.

Dompke had tried, unsuccessfully, to lose weight on his own. Jumpstart Your Health was the lifeline he needed. “Finally, everything made sense: nutrition, exercise and support are all equal parts of the equation. The program is more than just a diet. It’s a lifestyle change, and it gave me the tools I needed to make changes for good,” explains Dompke. “The classes were interesting, the materials were easy to read, the goals were realistic, my instructors were compassionate and smart, and no one judged anyone.”

Dompke is now a stronger, healthier, and 80-pounds-lighter version of his former self. Best of all, with the support of Lions and grant funding from LCIF, he is no longer at risk of developing diabetes.

“Thank you, Lions! I want everyone to know how much good you’re doing for our communities every single day,” says Dompke.

Measurable Impact

Individuals at risk of developing type 2 diabetes are offered enrollment in Jumpstart Your Health in attempts to both stave off the disease and improve overall health and quality of life. In just over a year, the program screened 211 individuals, of whom 8% were diabetic and didn’t know. Another 31% were prediabetic. Of those with prediabetes, 57% enrolled in the program.

The Jumpstart Your Health program, supported by both Lions of District 1-J and LCIF, has been cited twice for “effectively delivering a quality, evidence-based program that meets all the standards for CDC [Centers for Disease Control] recognition,” putting the program into an elite group of diabetes prevention programs. In fact, only one other hospital in the state of Illinois offers a curriculum that has received this honor. Fortunately for Dompke, the program at Edward-Elmhurst Health was just minutes away.

Make a Difference Together

The LCIF Diabetes grant program offers financial support to Lions who seek to improve diabetes awareness, prevention and management initiatives in their communities, often in partnership with diabetes organizations in their districts. Lions are eligible to apply for grant funding of up to US$250,000 for impactful projects that enhance and expand diabetes camps, support comprehensive diabetes screening events, increase access to high-quality health facilities that provide diabetes services, and improve health care professionals’ knowledge.

“This program is proof that Lions are making a big difference in the community. With the help of Lions around the world who support LCIF, we created something that is not only changing but saving lives. This is just the start of what we can accomplish together,” says Lion Jim Worden of the Elmhurst Lions Club.

Visit lcif.org/BE100 to learn more about how LCIF plays a major role in responding to the diabetes global epidemic through comprehensive health initiatives targeted at the communities in which we live and serve.

The past director was awarded the Grand Master Key for his dedication to the association, the 55-Year Chevron, and the Ambassador of Goodwill Award, the highest honor the association bestows upon its members. A native of Wyoming, he ran the family dairy farm and enjoyed camping, hunting, fly fishing, and woodworking, and shared those skills with his grandchildren. He served in the National Guard and was a devout member of the First Presbyterian Church.
