Difficulty understanding conversations? Now there’s a simple, invisible and affordable solution

Perfect Choice HD™ is the personal sound amplifier that’s like reading glasses for your ears™!

Over the years, I’ve had more and more trouble understanding what people are saying. I have to get them to repeat themselves over and over… it’s really embarrassing. I found myself avoiding parties and gatherings— even church, where my inability to understand people was a problem. Then a friend told me about Perfect Choice HD™. It’s a small personal sound amplification product that’s simple to use and virtually invisible. It’s like a whole new world’s been opened up to me.

There isn’t anything wrong with my hearing, it’s just that some sounds— conversations, the TV, birds chirping—aren’t loud enough.

Now, this small, battery operated amplifier let’s me turn up the volume when I need it. I can adjust the volume to the level that suits me. Best of all, no one knows I’m wearing it. The battery case sits behind my ear and the clear sound tube carries the amplified sound to the tiny sound bud that rests in my ear canal. It’s comfortable, it doesn’t fill up my ear and, even though it’s small, the controls are easy to use and the battery is simple to change.

Just beyond the modest home I grew up in was the Australian bush, where kangaroos, wallabies and kookaburras roamed amid gum and wattle trees. My father, Jack, was an accountant who took the same train to work and sat in the same seat day after day. I trained to be a wool classer, rotely producing wool. But I dreamt of doing something more influential. So I eventually went into real estate and built up my business.

As a Lion I also dreamt of making a big impact. So when a young Australian woman spoke to our club about an orphanage she worked at in India, my club dove right in. The parents of many of these children had been killed by rebels. We helped get them better housing, and from that point many thrived in school.

For years I had another dream I kept to myself. I saw the remarkable ability of Lions to change lives, and I wanted to fully devote myself to Lions. The dream came true a few years ago when I learned I was to be nominated for international president.

Lions, follow your dreams. They will not lead you astray. Nearly every great accomplishment began as a wildly ambitious dream whether it was landing a man on the moon, running a four-minute mile or webbing together the entire world through computers. Listen to your heart. Don’t ever impede a great idea whose time has come.

To me, dreams are not visions that arise in sleep but plans that don’t let you sleep. Identify your dream and work to achieve it. It’s up to you to decide what your dream is. Plant the seed and let it grow. Find inspiration and guidance from other clubs and from Lions Clubs International. As I like to say, don’t tell me to aim for the stars when there are footprints on the moon.

Anne and I look forward to you Following Your Dream in 2013-14. Good luck, godspeed and congratulations—great service is the inevitable result of pursuing dreams.

NEAREST LIBRARY IS HANDMADE

Little free libraries are what you might expect: small, free-standing, handcrafted structures where people can take and leave books. The Little Free Library organization, based in Wisconsin, has sent out nearly 4,000 official library signs worldwide. One of the latest was built in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, thanks to the Eau Claire Seymour Lions Club. Lions Terry McDougall and Dave Swan built a replica of the unused Little Red School at the site of the nearby rural school. The club donated books to the Little Red School Free Library. The club is working on another free library with an aquatic theme at the municipal pool.

LIONS CLEAN UP AFTER POWERFUL TWISTERS

Members of a small club chartered just three years ago, Carney Lions sprang into action in May when tornadoes devastated their tiny town as well as Moore and other places in Oklahoma. “They were digging people out of the rubble. They were seeking medical attention for them,” says Dawn Miller, 3-H second vice district governor.

Lions in Oklahoma City and elsewhere in the state also responded immediately to the tornadoes on May 20 that killed 23 people and injured nearly 400. Lions used their mobile health screening unit as a command post for aid at the Wal-Mart in Moore and later at a central relief station at a high school. They passed out vouchers, made possible by LCIF funds, provided blood glucose screenings and advised storm victims on what to do next. Zone Chairperson Jacque Mooney, who lost her home in the tornado that hit the Moore area in 1999, created a handy checklist of things to do for storm victims.

LCIF approved a $100,000 Major Catastrophe grant for disaster relief in Oklahoma and also collected donations from Lions. More than $200,000 is now available from LCIF for Lions in Oklahoma. Recovery plans have not been made yet, but some Lions have suggested helping the schools that were destroyed or damaged. The Lions’ contributions, especially in Carney, demonstrated the value of service clubs, says Miller, who formerly lived in Moore and whose home was damaged by the 1999 tornado. “It’s testimony to the great need for local clubs familiar with their own communities,” she says.

Dressed in full Lions regalia, Lions in South Carolina marched down main streets in dozens of towns in March to let residents know of their presence and their service. About half of the 150 clubs in Multiple District 32 took part in the Walk for Sight. Marching Lions shook hands with curious onlookers and passed out club brochures and membership applications. The project culminated with a rally at the South Carolina State House in Columbia. State Senator Mike Fair and Past International Director Gene Spiess spoke at the rally, according to Randy Edwards, project chairperson.

RICHARD “TONY” DOYLE

Lately at Spring Branch-Bulverde Lions’ events, children are on the lookout for their beloved Lion pirate. After losing his leg in 2005 while serving in Iraq, retired Army Sgt. Richard “Tony” Doyle had toyed with the idea of creating a pirate character to show children there can be a bright side to any hardship in life. Since making that idea a reality last summer as a Texas Lions Camp counselor, Doyle is bringing fun and lightheartedness to Bulverde, Texas, while serving his Lions club and community in a unique, generous way.

How did you come up with the idea of becoming a pirate?
I had always wanted to be a “pirate” since losing my leg. When I became a camp counselor, I had the opportunity to bring the character to life. I have a prosthetic leg that looks really good as a peg leg, and I bought a pirate costume. The campers loved it, and so did the Lions and camp staff.

Why did you become a Texas Lions Camp counselor?
I’m a full-time student studying European history and agriculture, and last year a friend at school who was a counselor approached me about it. I thought it would be good to show children that just because you have a disability doesn’t mean you can’t do things. I’ll be the archery activity leader this summer.

How did you develop an interest in archery?
When I was doing rehab at the Center for the Intrepid, a bunch of us were invited to a U.S. Paralympics training center to try out some sports. I was amazed when I watched a double amputee [one arm and one leg] archer use his hand to hold the bow and draw the string back with his teeth. I tried it and was a natural.

What do the campers learn from archery?
Last year there was a boy with severe cerebral palsy who didn’t want anything to do with archery. Finally we managed to talk him into trying it. He put his hand on my wrist while I pulled the string back. At the moment it released, he had a smile that was beyond ear-to-ear! Words can’t do it justice how it felt. Maybe later he’ll try something he never would have because of that experience.

When you’re the pirate, do children ask about your leg?
Yes, and I tell them what happened in a simple and direct way. Parents try to keep their kids from asking, but I don’t mind. They’re genuinely interested in why I’m different. I want them to know that just because you may become disabled, you can still live life. It’s a way of serving my community and showing that adversity can be turned into fun.

CLUB OF THE MONTH
FORT VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON

YEAR FOUNDED: 1955

MEETING MATTERS: As the 94 Lions arrive for their weekly lunch meeting, they enjoy piano music played by Lion John Caldwell. At each meeting they learn from guest speakers and have a chance to win an ever-growing jackpot raffle.

MEMBERSHIP ON THE RISE: Thanks to the club’s social, upbeat approach, more than 25 new Lions of all ages have recently joined through helping with projects and attending fun meetings and open houses. The club’s original president, 104-year-old LeRoy DeBast, still proudly serves.

STAYING ON TRACK FOR THE BLIND: For the past 35 years, the Lions have held an annual track and field meet for visually impaired youths. More than 100 students convene at the Washington State School for the Blind for the fun competition, pre-meet career talks by visually impaired adults and a post-meet dance.

FAST FOOD: Since the Lions started “Walk and Knock” in 1982, it has grown to become the county’s largest food drive. Through asking for food donations door-to-door on the first Saturday in December, Lions and other volunteers collect enough food to stock 13 food banks through March.

ROCK STARS FOR A CAUSE: The Lions’ biggest fundraisers are their eclectic benefit concerts featuring local talent, including themselves. Lions have surprised audiences by dressing in costume and rapping, singing reggae tunes and crooning country oldies. These good sports have raised close to $100,000 for Sightfirst II and other causes.

WHY SERVE? “My boss ordered me to join a community service group. Against my will I joined the Lions because they met at lunch. That was over 25 years ago. Since then, I’ve learned how good it feels to be a member of a group that helps so many in so many ways.” –Roy Pulliam, membership chairperson

OVERHEARD

“When you go to work every day, you work hard, fight the fight, chasing the almighty dollar, and that has its place. But you just don’t do that with the Lions club. You feel really good after doing what we do.”

“If we want to live in this community and we want to be a good community, we have to take care of the people who live here who don’t have the resources.”

Litter Patrol Lifts Community’s Spirit

Nothing stops the West Warwick Lions Litter Patrol in Rhode Island—not even Hurricane Sandy when it came roaring through the East Coast with crushing ferocity. “West Warwick was affected but not as badly as the towns along the coast. We lost power for two days. The Lions Litter Patrol hit the streets three days after the hurricane, the following morning after Halloween. We picked up hurricane debris and lots of candy wrappers,” says Paul Isenberg.

“Since last July, we’ve been picking up trash, pulling weeds, sweeping curbs and disposing of cigarette butts—lots of cigarette butts,” points out Isenberg, 2012-13 club president. The idea for the patrol came about the same month he took office. “I was walking through town and couldn’t believe how filthy it was. How could anyone be proud of where we live and what could outsiders possibly think when they drove through West Warwick?” he asked himself as he took in the litter-strewn sidewalks and streets.

“Something moved me to go home, get four large trash bags and a pair of gloves, drive back to town and spend three hours filling up those bags. It felt so rewarding that the next day I suggested to Lions that we continue this work as an ongoing community service project,” he recalls. The 21 club members agreed, and the Lions Litter Patrol was created, just a year after the club itself was chartered.

“We got permission from the town highway department and we invested in our own tools and supplies to make our work more productive. We got our shirts printed and even got a pickup truck for transporting us and our equipment,” he adds.

Once or twice a week, Lions don their fluorescent greenish-yellow shirts identifying them as members of the West Warwick Lions Litter Patrol and push trash barrels up and down Main Street. And, points out Isenberg, they’ve recently extended their patrol beyond Main Street into other neighborhoods. “I truly feel that the town of West Warwick is now one of the cleanest in the state,” he says. “Local business owners have come out of their stores and thanked us for our efforts. Everyone’s heard of ‘Adopt-a-Spot,’ a program where businesses agree to maintain a small portion of public land. Our Lions Litter Patrol takes that concept one step further and we call it ‘Adopt-a-Town.’ West Warwick has a lot of problems, but looking unsightly and unwelcoming will never be one of them because of the efforts of Lions.”
A Community Effort

Lions in Union, West Virginia, number 29 in a town of approximately 700, and their contributions to the community are numerous and ongoing. They’ve transformed a shabby tennis court into a new basketball court for the community’s youths to enjoy. “Last year, our club built a picnic shelter at the same park complex, which includes the town swimming pool,” says Lion Ed Via.

“Union is the county seat of Monroe county, population: 12,000. We are rather proud that the county contains no traffic light and that there is no four-lane highway anywhere in the county,” Via points out. “It does boast incredible natural beauty. We rather like our rural environment, and we have no coal. But there are limitations for our youth.” Since the only other basketball court was on school property and not readily available to the public, Lions voted to step in and provide another court at the park. The project also provided a “teachable moment,” he says.

“Our project director Norb Netzel alerted us to the fact that the Boy Scouts of America were looking for projects for the scouts attending the National Jamboree in July,” says Via. “We submitted the information, and it was approved as a test project to determine the area’s readiness to host scout work projects.” Officials, expecting 50,000 Scouts, volunteers and staff to attend the Jamboree at its new permanent reserve in West Virginia, wanted to find manageable activities participants could handle. Each Scout attending the 10-day Jamboree spent a day working on a community project.

“These projects are all over southern West Virginia,” says Via. “Our project and a couple of others elsewhere in the region were selected as models to test the logistics of having hundreds of Boy Scouts working in communities around the area.”

Joining Lions were local officials and residents, representatives of the Boy Scouts of America, the Civilian Conservation Corps, who are helping scouting officials plan the Jamboree projects, and AmeriCorps volunteers. “The AmeriCorps volunteers played the role of Scouts—and did a lot of work,” Via says.

Using borrowed bulldozers and backhoes, volunteers removed fencing on three sides, cut and cleared overhanging branches, weeds and vines, patched asphalt cracks and toted out debris that cluttered the courts. Donated goals and backboards will complete the park’s new basketball courts. “It’s a work in progress,” says Via.

Swiss Lions and Leos in Baden pedaled so troubled girls could start new lives. For a day several Lions and Leos transported more than 100 passengers in five bike taxis around Baden, a picturesque town of 18,000 near Zurich known for its mineral hot springs. Proceeds went toward a home in Zurich for girls and young women from abusive homes and for a project in Nepal to lift girls out of poverty.

Members of the Baden Heitersberg Lions Club, including a 69-year-old, and the Baden Leo Club took turns in the taxis, which had weak electric motors that need to be supplemented by pedal power. Among the passengers was a newly married couple. The rides generated 6,000 francs (US$6,300), which the Lions matched.

Lions Ease Radiation Fears

Fidgeting with apprehension, hundreds of people come daily to the public health department in Koriyama, Japan, to test their exposure to radiation. Three nuclear reactors in the Fukushima district suffered a full meltdown after the devastating earthquake/tsunami in March 2011.

Lions of District 332-D partnered with Lions Clubs International Foundation to donate two whole-body radiation counters to government authorities. Lions and LCIF also donated the machines to the towns of Kawabata and Ono, as well as four thyroid gland ultrasound imaging units.

“People in Fukushima are on thorns worrying about radiation. We hope these projects will relieve their anxiety even a little so they can live with peace of mind,” says Past District Governor Zenkuro Kubota.

Kubota credits Past International Director Jitsuhiro Yamada, then a Lions Clubs International board appointee, for spearheading the donations. A former executive director of the Japan Hospital Association, Yamada worked as a liaison between the hospital association and the Great East Japan Earthquake Recovery Support headquarters.

Expectant mothers and children were tested first, and the adults from areas with the highest levels of radiation were tested next.

The lifetime risk of contracting cancer rose slightly for a small group of people exposed to radiation in Japan, according to a report in May by the World Health Organization. But the trauma was worse, WHO warned. Disasters like this cause fear, anxiety, depression, and, in some instances, more severe psychiatric disorders.
Lions’ Irish Eyes Are Smiling

A Lion for two years, Sean Olohan does more than tell people about Lions and their importance. The Irish musician sings about his favorite service group. Two years ago he wrote and now often performs “The Lions—We Have the Community in Our Hearts,” a soft, lilting ballad with a catchy melody.

Olohan has fronted the Cantons, a four-piece band that plays rock, pop and traditional Irish music, since he was a school lad. Performing now mostly as AVOCA, the band has toured Europe and the United States, appeared on TV multiple times and recorded a couple hit songs.

Lions clubs in Ireland don’t sing at meetings. But Olohan and his mates from the Wicklow and District Lions Club make up for it. They join together on his song while visiting hospitals and nursing homes. He plays it at his band’s concerts, too. “It’s good to have a captive audience to raise awareness of Lions,” he says with a chuckle. “Generally speaking, the response is fantastic.”

Olohan also will bring out his guitar and strum the song while at a pub kicking back pints of Guinness with Lions. He wrote the song for his club’s 25th anniversary. It’s a simple but effective declaration of Lions’ motives: “As Lions we don’t hunt/we don’t roar/we never, ever ask for more/what we give is right from the heart.”

Olohan, who owns a music store, uses his talents to promote good causes. He wrote “Saving Lives,” his most popular song, for the Lifeboat Rescue Service. He recently penned a tune about a hospice his town is building with support of Lions and others. That song, as well as the Lions song, will be on a new album of his with proceeds for the hospice.

Clubs Counter Diabetes

Getting diagnosed with diabetes 15 years ago led Hugh Sanchez to alter his lifestyle. It also changed his experience as a Lion: as president of the St. Croix Lions Club in the U.S. Virgin Islands he talks about the disease in interviews with newspapers and radio and television stations and helps lead club projects such as a diabetes fair and the Strides walk to raise awareness of the affliction.

He knows diabetes is a stealth disease that flies under the radar. “I always tell my story when I meet people. They say to me, ‘You are not diabetic. You look too good,’” says Sanchez, 66.

After his diagnosis, Sanchez stopped drinking alcohol and started exercising. He also learns as much as he can about diabetes and shares what he knows with participants in his club’s blood sugar screenings and other diabetes-related projects.
Barry Palmer said no, sorry, not able to make it. Lions from Germany were visiting his own club that same night. “Are you sure you can’t be there?” the club president asked him again. She wanted Palmer, then the district governor, to present Melvin Jones Fellowships that night. Her club was an hour’s drive from his home in Hornsby, near Sydney.

“We’d really love to have you,” the club president persisted. District Governor Palmer fidgeted and did some quick mental math about the travel. “Well, I’ll come if you can start the meeting just a little bit early,” he told her. “I’ll do it first, then I’ll have to leave.”

Not wanting to rudely rush away, he lingered at the meeting after he presented the awards. What he witnessed next practically melted his heart. Lions rolled a young girl in a wheelchair toward a four-wheeled contraption with an upright seat in the middle. The Lions gently placed her in the seat of the Hart Walker, and the girl, strapped in a standing position, pushed forward and willed herself across the room. At home the walker empowered her by mitigating her disability, allowing her to set the table for dinner, grab the phone and draw nearer to visiting friends.

The next morning Lion Palmer called the nonprofit in New South Wales trying to provide more children with Hart Walkers. A staffer told him they were seeking donors and a letter had already been written for Rotary. “Have you posted it?” he anxiously asked. “I’m waiting for my boss to sign it,” she replied.

“Well, change one word,” he said. “What’s that?”

“Change ‘Rotary’ to ‘Lions.’”

That bolt of sudden bravado left District Governor Palmer weak in the knees. “I put the phone down and thought, geez, what have I done. But we got the money together within 12 months—$300,000—and from there it just took off.”

The Hart Walkers now are one of the signature projects of Australian Lions. There’s definitely a method to President Palmer’s madness. Our new international president dreams big and then finds a way to realize those dreams. Since becoming a Lion, he’s spearheaded or played a major role in a host of service projects that have transformed lives and the overall direction of Lions in Australia. He set up the Education Builds Bridges program for Lions in Australia to provide downtrodden children in Indonesia with a solid education. He and his wife, Anne, persuaded his club to support an orphanage in India with their help. He represented Australian Lions in preparation for the Paralympics there in 2000 and championed Lions’ generous support of the well-respected Children’s Cancer Institute in Sydney.

People in need, especially children, bring out the Lion in President Palmer. “Children always bring a tear to his eye,” says Lion Pauline Henebery, who runs Education Builds Bridges. “He is very much a normal sort of bloke in that sense. He sees a child taking their first steps in a Hart Walker and tears come to his eyes.”

Other Lions who know him well relate similar encounters. President Palmer visited areas in East Timor stricken by the massive tsunami in 2004. “You could see his heart welling as he told stories about what he saw,” says David Thompson of the Hornsby Lions. “He told us what the Lions had done, how the funding was working. It was heartfelt, and he was so proud of what we were achieving.”

President Palmer traces his compassion to his Aussie roots. “Disadvantaged children have always been my passion,” he says. “I guess it’s part of the Australian ethic—[root for] the underdog: those that can’t help themselves and even with sports teams. If you’re the underdog you come out fighting. And I think that’s why I’ve always gone for the underdog to help them get up.”

This year President Palmer wants Lions to follow his path—to dream big and to reach out even more to the needy and underserved. He has planned a substantial
Barry J. Palmer is part Outback, part Sydney and all Aussie. "I’m proud to be an Australian because of our culture," he says. "It’s very relaxed, very laid back, easygoing and friendly. People you’ve known for years, people in the shops, banks, always want to have a chat.”

When Adam Scott hit a key shot at this year’s Masters, he screamed, “Aussie! Aussie! Aussie!” President Palmer understands. “The success of our athletes—we do very well for a country of only 20 million people. And I guess our isolation has been a plus in some ways that we don’t have a lot of problems and troubles or fights and wars. It’s a very peaceful place.”

Lions’ 97th international president was born in the middle of World War II in Hornsby on the outskirts of Sydney. The bush was President Palmer’s backyard. Wallabies hovered near his home. “You’d hear the thump, thump, thump, and you knew there was one hopping down the back fence line,” he recalls.

Young Palmer was one of three children. His dad, Jack, was an accountant. Sylvia, his mom, ran the home. Barry played three soccer matches each week. “I love the team spirit of it. I like the skill of it. It’s fast. It’s open,” he says.

Intending to work in the wool industry, he attended an agricultural high school. He worked in the bush and in wool sheds. He relished the outdoors. “I think it’s important to be in tune with nature—to just sit in the bush for a while and listen to what’s going on and observing the animals, birds and lizards.” But the wool industry slumped, so he found a job at a bank.

Funny thing about the bank business—you see how money can be made. “I was meeting all these customers running their own businesses and doing quite well. So I decided that if I worked as hard for myself as I did for the bank I’d probably make a lot of money,” says President Palmer.

Years ago, President Palmer began an educational program for poor children in Indonesia.

microfinance venture in India and other nations, a worldwide Lions Family Week in April for families and friends to have fun together serving, and a yearlong focus on increasing female membership. But the larger focus will be on the method—following your dream, his theme. (See page 21 for the complete Palmer program for 2013-14).

“I can’t give you what your dream will be,” he says. “It’s up to Lions to decide. It may relate to your club. It may relate to Lions. It may not. It may be something in your personal life. All we want you to do is plant the seed and go with it.”

President Palmer’s goal is ambitious, but longtime friends say don’t bet against him. “He has a very, very sharp mind and a very compassionate heart. And he’s a very hard worker,” says Thompson. “He’s a person who can talk to people to encourage them to do things they don’t think they can do. Very supportive. But he also has the strength to face the challenges that have to be faced. If hard words have to be said, he’s quite prepared to say them.”

Our new president became a Lion almost by accident in 1976. Customers at his retail store near Christmas wanted a particular fruitcake made by Sara Lee. Palmer called Sara Lee; employees would not let him sell the cake and did not tell him why. Now more curious than ever, Palmer did some digging and discovered the company made them under license for Lions clubs.

So Palmer called up a Hornsby Lion and offered to sell 20 cartons of the cake. “They thought I was nuts because I wasn’t going to make any money from it. But they didn’t realize that the cakes were bringing customers into the business,” he says with a smile. The club eventually invited him to a meeting to honor him with a certificate of appreciation. Then the light bulb finally went on, and Lions asked him to the next meeting. “I said, ‘Bill [Atlas], why didn’t you ever ask me to join?’ He said, ‘I thought you were too busy.’ ”

Lion Palmer jumped right in, doing repairs for senior citizens, cleaning yards, painting, and, of course, grilling at sausage sizzles, the Australian Lion equivalent of a pancake breakfast. Lions became a way of life for him and Anne as they hosted exchange students, got involved in Lions’ drug education programs and began
He started buying businesses, improving them and selling them. Then he went into real estate. It went well for him with Remax.

“He was pretty much the most successful real estate man around. He was known as the godfather of the industry,” says Lion Francesca Parrino, a protégé of President Palmer’s in the field.

President Palmer enjoyed furthering the dreams both of homebuyers and employees. “Assisting other people is something I’ve done for the last 30 years whether it’s a client or staff member,” he says. “You used to get a sixth sense just by talking to them. I never used to go through a fixed questionnaire when I was employing people. I used to put a pen on the desk and say, ‘Sell me the pen.’ You could see how they reacted. Some of them couldn’t sell me the pen. But at least they tried.”

Young Palmer met Anne when she was 15 and he was 19. He was the drummer in a rock ‘n roll band, and she came to see him play—over and over. Guitarist Vince Maloney later played with the Bee Gees, but the band fell apart. Barry and Anne were just beginning. Both quiet and reserved, they grew up and matured together as a couple. “Yeah, we hit it off. I couldn’t put my finger on any one thing. It was just a progression of growing up and wanting to share my life with her,” he says.

The Palmers have three children and eight grandchildren. He kicks the soccer ball around with the younger ones. “Anne was desperately keen to be a grandma. But if someone’s calling me grandpa then I’m getting old. So they call me poppy,” he says.

In Hornsby, the Palmers have the best of two worlds. “I enjoy living in Sydney but on the fringe. I don’t like the hustle and bustle,” he says. “It’s good to be at home where it’s quiet and the birds are the noise you hear.” Downtown Sydney is a 50-minute train ride away. “We would go there for the theater, for musicals, visiting bands. There are a lot of things to do there. I love going to Chinatown.”

It’s the world of Lions that will occupy them for the next year. “Look at the projects and the variety of things we do around the world,” President Palmer says. “What I’ve seen so far just blows me away as to what we can achieve.”
A service club’s membership restrictions led to the founding of Lions in Australia. In the mid-1940s, Bill Tresise served as national president of Apex, a community service organization of young adults in Australia. About to turn 40, the age limit for Apex, he was rebuffed when he tried to extend the limit. Traveling overseas, Tresise, a builder, met a Lion entirely by chance, and when he returned to Lismore he began the first Lions club there in 1947.

President Palmer is no stranger to sausage sizzles.

traveling and meeting Lions nationwide and worldwide as Barry took on more leadership roles.

The day he truly became a Lion was when he saw the effect the Hart Walker had on children. “I feel very emotional to know a child’s life has changed,” he says. “There was a case I remember very clearly with a little boy who refused to walk [in the Hart Walker]. The doctor said, ‘Oh, this sometimes happens.’ So as a reward his parents bought a puppy. They brought it into the room and just held it near the door. And this kid just took off and walked and grabbed his puppy.”

President Palmer’s challenge as president is not with one child or even a nation of disabled children but to effectively lead Lions of more than 200 nations. “What makes a good leader is somebody who is not afraid to surround themselves with people better than they are,” he says. “Too many leaders go the opposite way and surround themselves with people who are not as good as they are. The last thing I want is ‘yes men’ or ‘yes women.’ I want people who will challenge me and throw their thoughts out there for us to think about. That’s my basic philosophy on leadership. It’s as simple as that.”

His goal is to translate dreams of Lions—even his own—into reality. A year from now he will stand on stage at the international convention in Toronto and know in his heart to what extent dreams came true. “My dream is that I’m going to hand over to Peter Lynch [senior executive administrator at Lions Clubs International] an envelope with my dream written in it. I will ask him to open it and read it in Toronto to see if we got my dream. But basically my dream will be for everybody in Lions to achieve their dreams for the year.”

Aussie Lions like to fire up the barbie. The sausage sizzle is a time-honored fundraiser.

Australia has 27,251 Lions in 1,249 clubs.
Typifying their carefree, casual attitude, Australian Lions marching in a parade often sing “Waltzing Matilda,” a bush ballad or country song regarded as the unofficial national anthem. The title is slang for travelling by foot with one’s goods in a “Matilda” (a bag) slung over the back.

Aboriginals played the didgeridoo, a conical wind instrument, in 2010 in Sydney at the 93rd International Convention and were also scheduled to perform in July at the 96th International Convention in Hamburg.

In 2005, Barry Palmer received the Australian Medal, the second highest honor accorded to civilians, for his service particularly as a Lion in and outside of Australia.

Australian Lions are immensely proud of Palmer as president and predict great things. “I think he is a visionary. He can see things as how they should be, not as they are,” says Nigel Jenny, LCIF coordinator for Multiple District 201. Adds Lion Helen Sham-Ho (pictured), the first Asian-born member of Parliament in Australia, “I think he’ll be a great international president. He’s very, very much a person who can motivate people, who is gentle and who can impress people and drive them to do the right thing.”

The most famous Australian Lion is Ian Fraser of the Brisbane Inner West Lions Club. A clinical immunologist, he was named the 2006 Australian of the Year after creating a cervical cancer vaccine.

Follow Your Dream

“If you can dream it, you can do it.” -Walt Disney-

Martin Luther King did not say, "I have a goal." Or "I have an aim." The most powerful words in his famous speech were "I have a dream".

A dream embraces our most cherished longings. It embodies our very identity. We often won’t feel fulfilled as human beings until we realize our dreams.

The innovative and gifted Danish architect Jorn Utzon had a dream – to build a structure that would be renowned not only for its aesthetic design, but also one that would define its surroundings while defying the principles of modern architecture. In 1957 he got his chance. His design for the Sydney Opera House was selected from over 200 entries. There were many naysayers, and more than a few famous architects who said it couldn’t be done.

Work began in earnest in March 1959. Through both trial and tribulation, the opera house shell began to take shape. Finally, after 14 years, the opera house opened to the public in 1973. Today, it stands as a world-wide symbol for Sydney, and Utzon’s dream lives on as both an architectural marvel and a perfect example of “if you can dream it, you can achieve it.”

We all have hopes and dreams. We all go through times in our lives when we come up with ideas of things that we would like to accomplish in the years ahead. It’s a natural human tendency to come up with an ideal that we would like to fulfill in our future.

Everyone should have a dream – a vision – a goal, and something as unique as our very DNA. The challenge is really twofold: first identify your dream, and then work to achieve your dream, for there is nothing more disheartening than a dream unfulfilled.

It’s never too late to find your dream. Have you found yours?
SERVICE.
It’s More Than A Dream, It’s Our Identity

We exist to serve others. It sets us apart and really defines us as an organization. It’s why we can make the claim “The Global Leader In Humanitarian Service.”

Our Global Service Action Campaigns of engaging youth (August), working with the blind and visually impaired (October), feeding the hungry (December and January), and working to improve the environment (April) solidify our reputation for service, providing clubs and districts with yet another opportunity to effect positive change – to make life better for our neighbors. Each year our Global Service Action campaigns account for over 200 million hours of service, with a direct impact on 16 million people.

In addition to these campaigns, I’m also challenging the Lions of the world to focus on reducing poverty through actions such as micro-financing and low-cost technologies that can improve lives and allow more people in need to break the cycle of poverty and realize their fullest potential.
As impressive as our impact is globally, our local programs – at the club and district level – really connect us to our respective communities.

With now over 46,000 clubs around the world – in urban centers, suburban areas, and small towns that dot the rural landscape, our tradition of service has established Lions clubs as the very fabric of the communities in which they serve. Last year alone, with only half our clubs reporting through the new service activity reporting system, we know we completed over 450,000 service projects, representing 500 million service hours, benefiting over 200 million people.

It’s the local Lions club that sponsors youth athletic activities; that builds a community park or provides a scholarship to students. It’s the local Lions club that furnishes meals directly to needy families, or keeps food on the shelves of a hometown food bank. When someone needs a pair of eyeglasses, it’s the local Lions club that provides a voucher. We plant trees. We participate in activities to improve literacy rates. We sponsor youth exchange programs and youth mentoring programs. We assist the elderly, and so much more.

Lions dream big and take action to accomplish their dream. In the past several years, for example, Lions responded overwhelmingly to the challenge to improve reading and increase literacy rates through the Reading Action Program, and have planted millions of trees around the world to better our environment. Both the Reading Action Program and tree planting efforts are, of course, continuing as association programs. Together with the Global Service Action campaigns they help extend our reach by expanding our service footprint and increasing public awareness of who we are and what we do. When others see Lions in action, they want to share our dream of service for all.
Survey after survey indicates a significant interest in volunteering. But with more constraints placed on people’s time, available volunteer hours are at a minimum. Volunteers want to see immediate results and quick gratification if they are to invest free time serving others. In other words, it is no longer acceptable to simply attend a meeting or raise money for a cause. Volunteers want to roll up their sleeves and participate in a hands-on community service project. They want to see firsthand that at the end of the day, they have made a significant difference.

Volunteers want to belong to an organization dedicated to good – Lions clubs. They want an organization with experience – Lions clubs. They want an organization with global reach, but local impact – Lions clubs. They want to belong to an organization that nurtures a family atmosphere and fellowship. Again – Lions clubs.

We are a perfect fit for most people that are inclined to volunteer at the community level. So introduce your family, friends and neighbors to your Lions club.

I’m asking Lions during the month of April to sponsor “Friends and Family” events. Invite your family and friends to participate in a club service activity, open house, or casual gathering like a picnic or barbeque. There is no better way to introduce Lions to those who may be less than familiar with the organization you have come to know and love.
SHARE THE DREAM

Lions Clubs International represents a global network of responsible Lions club members. Individuals who are dedicated to service, committed to creating a world without suffering, and whose relentless pursuit of their own dreams, help others to realize their dreams. We are a team. We share the Lions dream. Each of us is responsible not only for our fellow members, but for our association’s future as well.

District Governor teams work The Global Membership Team (GMT) and Global Leadership Team (GLT) and others to stimulate membership growth through service and engagement, and identify and develop inspired, effective Lions leaders. They take focused action so that our dream of a better world can be kept alive and thriving.

Good leaders do not function in a vacuum. Good leaders know the value of working together, and achieving success through teamwork. The first step down the path to effective leadership is to have a team around you that can help achieve a shared dream.

As you follow your dream, it’s important to initiate action, promote teamwork, generate momentum and embrace risks. Share your dream with others. Engage every resource available to make your dream come true. Work hard, learn valuable leadership skills, develop confidence, and strengthen the foundation for our future by taking advantage of our variety of web-based and instructor-led training and development opportunities. Visit the online Leadership Resource Center for ideas and suggestions as you construct your dream.

“A dream you dream alone is only a dream. A dream you dream together is reality”
- John Lennon
The three R’s - RESPONSIBILITY, RECOGNITION AND REACH

As Lions, we all have a strong sense of awareness for the needs of others and a strong sense of RESPONSIBILITY in our continuing quest to make our communities better. We all know that responsibility means taking care of others, being accountable and being trustworthy.

Responsibility also means ownership: owning what needs doing, then finding a way to get it done. It means committing ourselves – to lead, to create, to solve problems – and then following through. It involves taking risks and working hard.

I think of responsibility as seizing what’s in front of you, exerting choice, and taking control and having the ability to respond and take action. It’s going out and creating what you want through personal choices. It is important to be aware of where our responsibilities end and where the responsibilities of others begin. We must let others be responsible for their own challenges, and yes – their own dreams, if they are to grow, and encouraging their dreams by recognizing their achievements.
RECOGNITION is a key component of member satisfaction.

Recognition is a behavior deeply rooted in the Lions heritage and tradition of service. It should be implemented on a regular basis. Timely recognition of the achievements and contributions of all members keeps club life fresh, and members motivated.

I have created the Dream Achiever Awards to recognize district governors and their teams, as well as awards for zone and region chairpersons. These awards are timely – with opportunities to earn awards each quarter, and they also require the cooperation and success at the club level. Criteria for the awards can be found on the LCI website.

Clubs can be recognized for achievement by fulfilling the criteria for the Club Excellence Award, and of course district governors can earn the District Governor Team Excellence Award. Both recognize excellence in service, management, leadership development and club growth.

But what about the individual club member? The one that can always be counted on to take an active role in service projects; the one that always calls when a club member is sick; the one that is always first to congratulate others for their achievements; and the one that no matter what, the club can always count upon. You know who they are. Don’t forget to recognize THEIR achievement. Sometimes just a simple “thank you” or a handshake will do. Or why not create your own club awards – like a certificate for “unsung hero.” Recognition and praise go a long way toward keeping morale high and adding to a positive club experience for members.

Member satisfaction is key to our ability to retain our members, and also key to expanding our service capacity and global REACH. Lions know what it means to reach out to other people. We’ve been reaching others through service since 1917.

Although all of us have individual dreams and aspirations, all Lions do share at least one dream – a world that knows no suffering. But community needs continue to escalate. We must extend our reach and expand our capacity in order to address those needs.
Reaching out to others is embedded in our heritage and our history. To understand the meaning of being a Lion and serving others, one need look no further than the Lions Clubs International Purposes and Code of Ethics. Consider the following excerpts:

FROM OUR PURPOSES
TO CREATE and foster a spirit of understanding among the peoples of the world.

TO TAKE an active interest in the civic, cultural, social and moral welfare of the community.

TO ENCOURAGE service-minded people to serve their community without personal financial reward

FROM OUR CODE OF ETHICS
TO SHOW my faith in the worthiness of my vocation by industrious application to the end that I may merit a reputation for quality of service.

TO HOLD friendship as an end not a means. To hold that true friendship exists not on account of the service performed by one to another, but that true friendship demands nothing but accepts service in the spirit in which it is given.

ALWAYS to bear in mind my obligations as a citizen to my nation, my state and my community, and to give them unswerving loyalty in word, act and deed. To give them freely of my time, labor, and means.

TO AID others by giving my sympathy to those in distress, my aid to the weak, and my substance to the needy.

I often have to refer myself back to some of those phrases to remind myself how important it is to share our dream of service with others and extend our reach.

The best way to expand our reach is by increasing our membership. The more members we have, the more service we can provide. You see – we don’t work for membership growth simply to increase numbers. The aim of membership growth is to increase our capacity to serve and maintain our position as the world’s greatest provider of humanitarian service. Each act of service brings us one step closer to our dream.

By inviting new members – women, young people, family, friends – and by focusing on member satisfaction through an improved club atmosphere, we can retain more members and increase our capacity to serve others.
1 In 5 Keeps Our Dream Alive

Members join for a number of reasons:
- To serve their community
- To be involved with a specific service or cause
- To serve with friends or family
- For the opportunity to become a leader

Members leave because many of those reasons are not fulfilled. It is critical that new members are made to feel welcome, and that their opinions are sought. It’s equally important to involve all members in club activities, and that activities are meeting the needs and desires of club members. This might mean finding new ways to serve; updating club traditions; starting new traditions; and being open to new ideas. It may also mean ensuring that all members are given an opportunity to lead – either as a club officer or chairperson of a club project. Retaining our members is incumbent upon all Lions.

Although we enjoy a very high level of recruiting, I wonder how many more members we could recruit and retain, and how much better we can make their volunteer experience with the proper care, creativity, and dedication to providing a meaningful experience?

Recruiting new members has never been a major problem. Each and every year, we recruit on average 200,000 new members. But at the end of the year, when final numbers are tabulated, our net gain is a small portion of that. Why? We simply are not retaining enough of our members. Over the past 5 years, if we had reduced the percentage of members who left by 20%, our membership today would stand at nearly 1.5 million, with positive net growth in every constitutional area. In other words – if we had retained just 1 out of every 5 members who left over the past 5 years, our membership would have increased significantly, thereby helping us keep pace with the growing needs of our communities.

A positive club atmosphere and meaningful service activities are the most important factors in member satisfaction. The primary tool available to clubs to ensure overall success is the Club Excellence Process (CEP), available on the LCI website. It amounts to a comprehensive guide to a more meaningful club experience. Two items in the Club Excellence Process checklist pay particularly big dividends – the Community Needs Assessment and the “How Are Your Ratings?” survey. Completing both of these items has the potential to re-energize a club’s atmosphere and improve member satisfaction.

Ultimately, we want to retain each and every member and see our clubs continue to flourish, allowing us to continue to provide the service our communities have come to expect from the global leader in humanitarian service.
Since 1987 when the first woman joined Lions Clubs International, women are underrepresented in our membership ranks, but increasing. Women now represent 24.5% of our membership worldwide, even though women comprise just over half of the world’s population. So we are only halfway to our full potential. My dream is to increase the percentage of women members by an additional 5.5% in the next 12 months, taking us to 30% by the end of 2013-14. In addition, I want to achieve a 50/50 parity of men and women joining our association by our centennial year.

A recent study found that:

- 83% of participants reported that they acquired, improved or developed their leadership skills due to volunteer participation, and 78% reported improvement in their communications skills.
- Some 50% of participants have been involved as volunteers for more than 5 years, and 22% for more than 10 years.
- Nearly 40% of participants started volunteering before they were 16 years old, and over 55% were volunteering by the time they were 30 years old.
- Over 90% said they volunteered because it gave them a sense that they were doing something to improve the lives of others.
That study was conducted by Womens Way magazine, and all the respondents were women. Surprised? You shouldn’t be.

In 2010, Lions Clubs International began a Women and Family Task Force to assess the needs of women in our organization. There have been many findings of the task force, and one thing was very clear – women volunteer for the very same reasons men volunteer. And women join Lions clubs for the very same reasons men join Lions clubs – TO SERVE.

We are making progress. There are more women filling leadership roles in our organization – at the club, district and international level – than ever before in our history. That’s positive. But we can do better. We need to continue making significant progress toward achieving our ultimate goal of 50% women membership. Just remember – women join for the same reasons as men, and leave for the same reasons as men. All members want a satisfying volunteer experience.

To assist us in sharing our dream of service with others – men, women and young people, I am pleased to announce the association has developed a new tool – “Just Ask! – New Member Recruiting Guide For Clubs.”
Community
New Club Extension

One of the best ways Lions have been able to expand global reach is to open new clubs. New clubs create more opportunities for community and service-minded individuals to be involved in projects they care about. Forming new clubs allows Lions to identify and meet the needs of underserved areas within their communities. New clubs also create diversity by attracting new members, including more young adults and women.

There are many success stories – too numerous to mention – whereby new clubs were formed to serve a particular need. New clubs infuse new ideas and bring new ways of providing service. More importantly, they allow us to reach new members, providing them with an opportunity to make a positive impact on the lives of others.

As we try to accelerate our effort to extend new clubs, it is important to keep in mind that charter size matters. A recent LCI study shows that clubs that charter with at least 25 members are staying active longer. The higher number of charter members improves the club viability and vitality. My dream is to get new clubs to charter with 25 or more members, thereby improving their long-term success rate.

Leos and Lions - Sharing The Dream of Service

Do you remember when you were 16, 18, 21? Do you remember your first date, homework, studying for college finals? Do you remember starting your first job, or balancing your budget while balancing your career and home life with a young family? That’s the life of a Leo. And yet, in spite of an inordinately busy period in their lives, Leos find time to volunteer – often putting others before their own needs. Leos want to give and make a difference. Let them be young and experience volunteering on their own terms. Their Leo experience will go a long way in determining whether at some point in the future they will follow their dreams and continue their volunteer experience as Lions.

Our Leos are making a significant contribution. They have as much to teach us, as we have to teach them. We can learn from their enthusiasm, innovation and ingenuity, and we can continue to act as mentors to provide guidance, encouragement and recognition.

Their service is unique and inspiring. Embrace it, and continue accepting them as members of the Lions family.
Are You Dreaming In New Ways?

There are many ways to attain our dream of increasing our service capacity. One way is through effective public relations.

At the turn of this century, Lions Clubs International invested several million dollars using traditional public relations outlets. We reached an external audience of 8 million people per year. In 2011, we invested only US$300,000, yet reached an audience estimated at nearly 30 million people. That's a considerably higher return on our investment. How did we do it? Social media.

The widespread use of social media has fundamentally changed how people communicate and share information. Facebook now accounts for 12.3 percent of the time spent online versus just 7.2 percent in 2011.

PR is no longer left to the PR professional. Each and every one of our 1.35 million members now has the potential to increase public awareness of who we are and what we do – to tell the Lions story with passion and conviction – through websites and social media. But we have a long way to go. Currently, not enough of our clubs have websites and social media pages. We can do better. Through our e-clubhouse, every club can establish an online presence. I am pleased to announce that we have developed an automated e-clubhouse page for new clubs. Beginning this year, when a club receives its charter it will also be provided with an e-clubhouse site. It’s a great way for new clubs to share their story as they begin their dream of service.

An improved online presence through social media and websites will allow us to communicate faster and easier, and reach a larger audience. And with an improved social media presence, no one will be able to claim we are “the world’s best kept secret,” because we can share our story and our dream with millions of other people.

Some of our best success stories result from the work we do through Lions Clubs International Foundation (LCIF). Through LCIF, we are making dreams a reality.

Since its founding in 1968 LCIF has strived to sustain Lions’ humanitarian service goals throughout the world, awarding over 11,000 grants totaling more than US$811 million, in the four key areas of sight, youth, disaster relief and other humanitarian efforts.

In order to continue to make dreams possible for others, LCIF relies on the generous support and collaborative efforts of partner organizations such as The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, The Clinton Global Initiative, WHO, and governmental agencies. But most of all, LCIF relies on the continued support of Lions. Together, we can keep dreams alive for millions of people around the world.
Identify your dream. Believe in your dream. Share your dream. And most of all - “Follow Your Dream”

Dream On

Many years ago, Anne and I had a youth exchange student from Indonesia stay in our home. Her name was Meita. One day I asked her what she wanted to do with her life. She replied, “I want to be a doctor and work with the poor in my community.” We did not see or hear from her again for over 25 years. When I became an international director, I had the opportunity to speak at a Lions convention in Indonesia. I inquired if any Lions knew her as we were in her home town. The next day, Anne and I were walking through the lobby of our hotel when a young lady approached us with a gentleman and two children. She asked, “Are you Barry Palmer?” When I replied I was, she said, “I am Meita!” We were overjoyed to see her again, and not a bit surprised that she had achieved her dream of becoming a doctor and working with the underserved of her community.

Although it was difficult, and there were many obstacles placed in her way, she didn’t give up. She did not listen to naysayers who said she would never achieve her dream.

Don’t let anyone steal your dreams, or try to tell you your dreams are impossible.

We face many challenges. Even as we dream of a world where no need goes unmet, our dream stands in stark contrast to reality. But dreams are not achieved overnight. Dare to dream, and then work hard to achieve that dream.

In the end, remember that dreams give us reasons to be better than who we are. It doesn’t matter whether you have more or less skills, charisma, or talent than someone else. It doesn’t matter at all whether you come from a poor or wealthy background. Dreams know no boundaries, no demographics and no socio-economic standing. What matters is daring to have dreams and working hard to achieve them.

Bruce Dixon’s morning chats with Ann Allen, a clerk at this mini mart, inspired him to help her after her son died tragically.
Why I Became a Lion

A fallen soldier, a ransacked house and a rebuilding day—how fate and a desire to serve rescued a stricken family.

by Bruce Dixon

About a block away from my place is a Chevron station and mini mart. I’d stop for coffee on my way to work as a house painter. Ann Allen, 55, was always at the counter. We’d chat. She was a nice lady. This was 1990 in Berkeley, California. For nine years we were friends at the mini mart.

Then I didn’t see her for a while. Turns out she fell and broke her hip. She could not get up the four stairs into her house in Albany, so she stayed in a rehab facility while she healed. She was a borderline diabetic, so she was a bit slow to heal. There were complications, and it took a second surgery to get her straightened out.

Eventually she was able to get back to work on a part-time basis. Almost in tears, she told me, “I can get into my house now but I can’t live there. They ruined my house!”

So I went out there to take a look at it with my friend Mike Charnoky. Wow! While she was away, homeless people broke into it. They totally trashed it. They took all the clothes out of her closets and piled them in the living room. There were “nests” where they burrowed in for warmth. They left the doors open and there was scat from mice, rats, feral cats, raccoons. It was completely uninhabitable.

Mike and I were appalled. I went to local businesses and got a nine-yard dumpster donated. We began to clear the house. It took a second dumpster and a few dump runs before the place was in any condition to even start assessing the damage.

This was when I learned about her tragedy. Her son had been a naval aviator. He was the best of the best. A flight instructor, Lt. Commander Logan Allen III stood over six-feet tall, huge for a pilot. His call sign was “Lurch.” He was a good family man with a wife and two children.
Allen was instructing in the F14-model A off the Virginia coast when his plane went into a flat spin. Allen shouted, “I can hold it! I can ...” The commander he was with ejected both of them. Taken by surprise, Logan slammed against the canopy. His body was never recovered.

There was a somber military funeral: the 21-gun salute, a “missing man” formation flyover and a coffin filled with bricks and covered by four-by-six-foot American flag. They folded up that flag and gave it to Ann, along with his flight suit.

Ann lived with her grandson, her daughter’s child. Here’s what I never had the nerve to tell her: while these people were trashing her house, as near as I can figure, they dragged her grandson’s bed out back and used that flag to start it on fire. I simply told Ann that the flag was stolen. I cleaned up the charred remnants of the Stars and Stripes. It moved me to tears. I was livid.

I have a confession to make. The story about Ann makes me look good. Well, I needed to do some good. I knew I had bills to pay, mistakes to make up for. I grew up under tough circumstances. My mom was legally blind. My dad abandoned us when I was in the second grade on the Oregon coast. You can probably guess I was a handful and the kind of trouble I got in. There were drugs, an alternative high school, scrapes with the law.

It took time, but I eventually pulled out of my downward spiral. I’m not sure exactly why but I know when things turned around. My best friend’s mom, dying of bone marrow cancer, gave me her 1982 Nissan Maxima. Humbled by the gift, I vowed to do the best I can, to do good for others. Someone had believed in me. That was the nugget of help I needed to climb out of the hole I was in.

So before Ann’s predicament, I had been doing volunteer work for a couple years with an organization called Christmas in April. They have since changed their name to Rebuilding Together. They provide home repairs to elderly, disabled and low-income homeowners. I helped Ann apply with them.

There were questions about the house deed. Ann had inherited the house from her mother. Her sister was named on the deed and had to formally renounce interest in the property. Finally, it was decided that Ann qualified. “But who in their right mind would be the house captain for such a large project?” they asked. They really said that.

It may be debatable as to whether or not I am in my right mind but I stepped up. I was given a budget of $5,000. And 501(c)(3) donation forms to use. About then I started to realize just exactly how far over my head I was.

The first thing I requested were volunteers to sterilize the place. An entire sorority came down. Thirty highly motivated young women scrubbed that place from top to bottom. It was the middle of January. I needed to finish the project by National Rebuilding Day, the last Saturday in April. Did I mention I was holding a full-time job?

I discovered that the plumbing was trashed and the wiring was substandard. The fuse box consisted of a couple of two-by-fours pounded into the ground and held together by a few one-by-sixes. Screwed into the one-by-sixes, this assembly was physically touching the gas main. I don’t know a whole lot about electrical engineering and I don’t know a lot about natural gas. I do know that it is a bad idea to mix the two.

So I went to our local International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers to explain the situation. After they had assessed the property they made it a project for apprentices, who upgraded the service and rewired outlets.

The Rebuilding Together office found a donation of 1,200-square-feet of pristine, extra-thick, cream-colored carpet. All I had to do was round up three guys, tear it out of the penthouse it was in and transport it. That was a bear.

At least I had help. Allan Maris, the vice mayor of Albany, was assigned as my first mate. His job was to call the volunteers after they were assigned to my site. Still, it was getting overwhelming. The Rebuilding Together office suggested that I go to local service groups to ask for help.

I located the Albany Lions Club and went to a meeting. I told them the situation just as I have told you. Wow! Those guys took it to heart. Bill Johnson, a great man and a great Lion, made certain that, besides my unskilled volunteers, I had at least half a dozen highly skilled guys complete with tools on every work day. Things got a lot easier after the Lions got involved.

I had at least half a dozen highly skilled guys complete with tools on every work day. Things got a lot easier after the Lions got involved.
Rooter franchise. Day after day, they fixed the plumbing, including installing a brand new water heater. That was just after I discovered, to my chagrin, that it takes a certain very specific skill set to successfully install a water heater. Yikes! What a mess that was.

While all this was going on I had been on the phone with the Navy’s Funeral Honors Division. A lot of questions had to be answered. All told I was on the phone with them for almost 50 hours.

On the National Rebuilding Day we started with 50 volunteers. We painted, fixed the floors, did every last little thing to get the home move-in ready. Over the course of the day other sites sent me their extra people. They created a beautiful backyard garden. The number of volunteers swelled to 100 by noon.

I had managed to keep it from Ann that I was talking to the Navy. At noon we were out front eating lunch. Ann was thanking the volunteers on the front porch when an officer in his crisp dress whites came around the corner. He presented Ann with a replacement flag: “On behalf of a proud Navy and a grateful nation ...” Ann cried like a baby. It was beautiful.

I had basically lived and breathed this project for six months. Mind you, this was before 9/11, back when it was not popular to be pro-military in Berkeley. On average, before and after my job, I put in 20 hours a week, every week for six months. Lions and others were tremendously generous with their time. On a $5,000 budget we completed home repairs worth more than $75,000.

Bill Johnson asked me to join the Albany Lions. How could I say no? So that is how it came about that I joined the Albany Lions Club in 2000. To this day it remains one of the most positive things that I have done in my life. My troubled youth stayed with me well into my adult years. It was hard to shake the feeling I was no good. Being a Lion helped heal me. Serving others has been a salve for my inner wounds.

To this day, neither Allan Maris nor I can talk about this time in our lives without getting a bit misty. It was a powerful experience. Ann is still alive though not in the best of health. To the best of my knowledge, she still believes the flag was stolen.

This car donated to Dixon by his mom’s best friend lifted his spirits and helped turn his life around. (right) Lt. Commander Logan Allen III.
An Active Club Makes Its Case

Chicago Mont Clare/Elmwood Park Lions are not a shy bunch. When they visited seniors at a retirement home they made a grand and noisy entrance playing “Seventy-Six Trombones” on kazooos. Members know how to get area residents to pay attention to the club and support its projects. On Candy Day some members take to the streets wearing a lion mane or full lion costume, and the club’s biggest fundraiser is a taste of the exotic: a wild game dinner. Even a presumably straightforward initiative such as securing discounted eyeglasses comes with a twist. The club’s longtime partner is Randy “Vision Man” Schultz, whose optical store contains an electric train that ceremoniously delivers glasses to customers.

The club’s penchant for publicity has paid off. Last year the 42-member club nabbed two first places in the International Contest at the convention in Busan, Korea: best newsletter and best website. A few months ago, the club filled a bookcase with memorabilia at the Elmwood Park Library. “Check us out” was the unspoken message of the display—because we serve, we have fun and we are everywhere in the community.

Maine's Oldest Club Gets Younger

College students revitalize the 90-year-old Portland Lions Club

by John R. Platt
Leo Gould, Maine Lions’ vice district governor in 2012-13, has some bad news for the members of the Portland Lions Club. “Lions membership in Maine is down this year,” he tells them at a recent meeting. The state has lost 60 members, mostly due to age. Four clubs shuttered their doors.

Gould and his entourage of fellow Lions from the Whitefield club (they didn’t let him make the 120-mile round trip alone) have been sharing this information with clubs throughout the state. In Portland, he looks over his glasses and encourages the crowd to redouble their efforts to recruit new members.

But the Portland club happens to be already way ahead of him. Not only is the club growing in size, it is also getting younger.

From 70 to 40

“We just dropped our average member age from 70 to 40,” Bruce Roullard, the 2012-13 president and president since 2004, tells me. We’re in the parking lot of the Iris Network, a nonprofit that helps people with visual impairments. The organization’s offices are just a few blocks away from two sports arenas and the Portland Lions sell parking spaces in the lot before each game. The funds go to the Iris Network and to buy eyeglasses for people in nearby communities. Last year they raised more than $40,000.

As Roullard, a mortgage manager with Bank of America, collects $5 bills from incoming sports fans, he tells me about the club’s recent growth. The Lions started an initiative with the University of Southern Maine (USM) campus in Portland. They invite students to join. Older members often volunteer to pay their dues. The students are interested not only because they can serve the community but also because they gain leadership experience by shadowing the current officers and project leaders. Roullard smiles as he tells me that the club has bought in 11 new student members since the initiative began in 2011.

Service as A Way of Life

Back at the club’s meeting I meet Nate Cadorette, a 22-year-old finance major with close-cropped black hair and long sideburns who is already serving as the club’s first vice president, a position that had been vacant for 20 years. Unlike some of the older members in attendance, who wear the familiar Maine uniform of flannel and fleece, Cadorette is dressed in a blue button-down shirt and tie. A member of the service-oriented Sigma Nu fraternity, he was already aware of the Iris Network through participating in their white cane walks every year. "I take service very seriously," he says.

Fellow USM students Tyler Boothby and Tyler Junkins also belong to Sigma Nu and joined the Lions with Cadorette. As the meeting begins, they hop up out of their seats to guide two of the club’s blind members to open chairs. It’s an easy, practiced move. "We have a friend at USM who is visually impaired," Boothby tells me.

Also a 22-year-old finance major—although he looks even younger—Boothby serves as the club’s second vice president. He first met Iris Network executive director James Phipps at one of the white cane walks. Phipps, like the clients he serves, is blind. “Jim Phipps is an unbelievable man,” Boothby says. “To overcome what he has to become who he is now, it’s inspiring. When I’m out there parking cars it’s not for me, it’s for people like that to help them out.”

A Club with History

The new blood has brought energy to the club, says 71-year-old Realtor Leonard Scott, who recently celebrated his 50th anniversary as a Lion. “I was one of the youngest members of the club when I moved to Portland 14 years ago,” he recounts. He remembers often hearing about the glory days of the club in the 1940s when it held noontime meetings at Portland’s famed Eastland Hotel and membership capped out at 125.

Membership had dropped to about 50 people by the time Roy Koster joined in the 1970s, the 64-year-old Lion tells me by phone from his office at Central Maine Power more than 50 miles away. “Slowly but surely, the numbers dwindled,” he laments. He says the members, mostly business leaders who commuted into Portland, started working through their lunch hours, so the club switched to evening meetings. Even that cost them members, as some people wanted to go home at the end of the day.

“The aging membership made it harder to raise money. None of us particularly wants to hawk stuff on the sidewalks,” Koster says. “We did Bingo before there was a smoking ban. I’d come home and my wife would make me take my clothes off on the porch. That was a tough way to make some bucks.”

The parking, which the club started eight years ago, solved many of those problems. “It’s not much work, and it’s been a great way to raise funds,” Koster says. But membership continued to age and decline, making it harder to get enough people to work the events. “The kids have definitely helped turn that around,” he says.

The growth comes at an opportune time. The oldest club in Maine and the first north of Boston, the Portland Lions celebrated their 90th anniversary in March. “There’s a lot of history here,” Rouillard says. “I think the USM initiative is another piece of history for this club.”

Growth and Opportunity

Rouillard sees the initiative as a benefit both to the club and the students. “It’s a really good opportunity for students to experience community involvement,” he says. “We hope that when they graduate from USM they will stay Lions. Even if they move elsewhere, their memberships will stay with them.”

Cadorette, who works full-time as a junior accountant while going to school, says there’s nothing he likes more than finishing a day’s work and going out to raise money for the club’s causes. He looks forward to possibly taking over as president from Rouillard in a year or two. “I didn’t know I had this kind of potential,” he says with a smile.

Meeting and working with the older members has also been a life-defining experience for Cadorette. “These guys give their entire lives to helping people,” says Cadorette. “It’s something I hope I can do for the next 40 years.”

Growing up in a small Turkish village and not able to see, Seyfullah Aktaş had no idea that he would want to become a massage therapist as an adult. His options in life seemed very limited. But when given the chance to learn massage therapy through the Six Dots Foundation for the Blind, Aktaş took the life-changing opportunity.

As a child, Aktaş attended a primary school for the blind, but received his high school education in a local school. Aktaş did not receive needed skills to use a computer, find a job or even walk freely with his white cane.

Unfortunately, Aktaş’s situation is not unique. That is why the Lions Clubs of Istanbul and District 118 established the Six Dots Foundation for the Blind in 1972.

The Six Dots Foundation for the Blind educates, rehabilitates and creates awareness for the blind and visually impaired in Turkey. There is clearly a great need. According to the Turkish Statistical Institute, 75 percent of people with visual impairments and blindness in Turkey were unemployed in 2010.

Aktaş began attending the foundation’s rehabilitation center in 2005. Located in Istanbul, the center is an impressive place. Receiving support from Turkish Lions, it provides free vocational training, education, swimming lessons, eye screenings, sports facilities and a digital library that lends audio books throughout Turkey.

The rehabilitation center’s goal is to provide people who are blind with the tools needed to overcome any obstacles encountered in life. Turkish Lions have received Lions Clubs International Foundation (LCIF) grants, allowing them to assist with this goal. This support means a lot to Aktaş.

“I achieved mobility and developed daily living skills. After six months, I could walk freely with my white cane in the crowded streets of Istanbul,” says Aktaş. “Reading is my hobby. LCIF’s grant for a recording room enriched the voiced library, increasing my reading pleasure.”

The real benefit for Aktaş, however, was massage therapy training, a program started in 1998. Program graduates are highly sought for employment in hospitals, nursing homes and spas.

Originally, the massage training unit could only accommodate five massage therapy students annually. So, through an LCIF grant, the Six Dots Foundation for the Blind and the Lions Clubs of District 118-T expanded the program in 2010. The center now has seven beds used as student training stations and work stations for practicing graduates, including Aktaş.

“This was a great opportunity. I am married and have a child. With the enlarged capacity, I earn more money and can provide my family with better living standards,” says Aktaş. “You have changed not only my life, but the lives of many blind people in Turkey. My friends and I have become productive, and this is a wonderful feeling.”

For Aktaş, the Six Dots Foundation for the Blind, Lions and LCIF made his dreams come true. “You have made me a free person; you gave meaning to my life,” he says. “I read more now and I work with more motivation because I have a modern work place. Thank you.”

Seyfullah Aktaş’s life was changed after receiving massage training for the blind in Turkey.
Saying goodbye to members is something Lions never want to do. But when a member does leave, Lions often wonder why. “After a member left our club, he told me he did not feel that it was necessary to explain his reasons. He was unhappy with something, but how do we correct the problem if we don’t know what happened?” asks Lion Rosa Branco of Cumberland, Rhode Island.

Some answers can be found by conducting exit interviews with departing members. The Cumberland Lions had casually attempted this through speaking with those leaving, but the results were lackluster. After trying out a written exit interview this year, Branco has found that former Lions are likely to be candid and specific. “I think by using a written format we can get better insights. People need to have time to really think and then put their comments in writing. Plus, the written responses can be reviewed as needed because there is a paper trail,” says Branco.

With the goal of improving retention, Token Creek Lion Tara Vraniak has been mailing exit surveys for Wisconsin’s District 27-D1 since 2009. With a 30 percent response rate, this centralized method is working well for the district. “I get a lot of written responses because I am an independent source. People can put their true feelings down on paper,” she says. Vraniak, a Global Membership Team member, compiles and shares the findings with clubs, which can then take necessary action and incorporate this vital information into the Club Excellence Process.

Along with the survey, Vraniak includes a letter stressing its importance and a postage-paid return envelope to make the process simple for respondents. “Make it easy to fill out and return. And make sure you are diligent in getting the surveys out quickly,” Vraniak advises. Clubs can design their own survey or use LCI’s Former Member Questionnaire, which poses not only questions regarding reasons for leaving but also invites opinions about the club’s service projects, ideas for improvements and suggestions for changes that may have retained the member.

No matter how critical the feedback is, it must be welcomed, says Vraniak. “Take this feedback in a positive way. People are unhappy with their clubs for many different reasons and we can’t change unless we understand the mistakes we are making. It is then important to take action on those problem areas.” Branco concurs. “Criticism is constructive and we can learn how to make improvements by knowing exactly what we are doing wrong, instead of just making educated guesses.”

Heralding the arrival of fall, Lions in Dexter, Michigan, celebrate apples in all their tasty forms. Apple cider, apple pie, apple doughnuts, apples plain or coated in caramel—Lions’ Apple Daze doesn’t lack for apples. Or people, either. One of the biggest fundraisers Lions sponsor, second only to the club’s Christmas tree sale, Apple Daze last year raised $4,000. Profits are put back into the community by Lions, who give scholarships, donate eyeglasses, screen schoolchildren, and support Leader Dogs and Paws with a Cause, which trains assistance dogs.

“Despite the chilly weather, we had a lot of people. I bet I was the warmest person there!” says Lion Ray Lowery of wearing a furry lion costume to publicize the club. “It’s a lot of fun interacting with the kids as well as the teens and adults. The kids’ faces just light up.”

In addition to apples, there were hayrides, a bounce house, miniature golf, arts and crafts booths, a classic car show and one of the biggest hits, a pie-eating contest. Nineteen daring residents gobbled up apple pies without using their hands. “Anyone from 6 to adult can participate,” says Lowery. It was, he declares, “rather messy.” Winners received gift certificates for ice cream and a pie of a different sort—pizza.

The Lavin family in New Jersey has public service in its blood. Out of 11 kids, three boys became firefighters like their dad, and Pat Lavin, now 61 and retired, was a career police officer and is a member of the Howell Township Lions Club. The Sandy Ground Project: Where Angels Play brought together Pat and his brother Bill, president of the New Jersey Firefighters Mutual Benevolent Association, in an opportunity to build 26 parks in memory of the victims of the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting and to restore shoreline devastated by Superstorm Sandy in New Jersey, Connecticut and New York.

Pat Lavin says Lions were “very responsive, eager to help” when they learned of the ambitious project. The first playground in Sea Bright was completed in March in memory of Anne Marie Murphy, a Sandy Hook teacher. Firefighters, police officers and volunteers including Lions worked together to construct a new playground where one had been destroyed during the storm. “This will surely put smiles on the children’s faces and at the same time, give some comfort to the victims’ families,” he says.

Bill Lavin says firefighters are grateful for Lions’ participation. “Lions from Howell, Farmingdale and Neptune, New Jersey, have participated by raising funds, attending ground-breaking and ribbon-cutting ceremonies and providing photographs and documentation of the project. Our goal is to raise $3 million and complete all 26 playgrounds by December 13, the anniversary of the tragedy.”

Howell Township Lions have also pledged 20 percent of funds raised from the club’s annual golf outing to the playground project. Last year, Lions raised more than $4,000 to pay for vision and diabetes care in the community as well as support for breast cancer survivors.
